

Sandy Doull

He has a BA Hons Dip Ed from La Trobe University and a Masters Degree in Public Health from the Department of Social and Preventive Medicine, Monash University, Melbourne Australia (1995). His thesis was entitled "ELF Exposure and Dose amongst Electrical and Electronics Workers." He has been a contributing researcher in many large publically funded research projects on worker exposure to EM fields. On behalf of the Federal Government of Australia Commonwealth Scientific Research Organization he collaborated in the preparation of an EMF literature reviews and presented this information to the Australian Standards Committee. He co-produced three film documentaries on EMF and health. He has worked in the field of Occupational Health and Safety for the past 26 years.